CHRISTMAS PLAY FREE GIFT TO COMMUNITY

Yuletide is to be eclebrated at Sequoia Union High School in a most unique program to be given next Friday night, December 16 at 8:00 p. m. This presentation which has been in the process of making for the last three weeks is unusual in that the audience is to be a part of the entertainment. Mrs. Balcomb, directin the play, Dickens' "Christmas Carol," which is a part of the program, with the assistance o the music, art and sewing departments has arranged this an nual affair in a most original manner as follows:

A selection from the school orchestra under the direction of Max Gelber will be played before the entertainment proper begins At the conclusion of the selection a processional will enter from the rear of the auditorium led by a Town crier, who is followed by four fiddlers, villagers, actors and actresses who are in the play, and the boys' and girls' choirs. At the last of the procession arrives upon the stage, a village urchin wil climb around the auditorium and decorate it with evergreens and Cristmas decorations, while the audience watches. The play will commence immediately after the decorating is finished. The girls choir will sing from the outside wings of the auditorium and the boys' choir from the orchestra pit.

The play itself is that famous "Christmas Carol" by Charles Dickens and is a favorite Christmas play of England and America. Through careful study of customs and costumes of the early nineteenth century England, Mrs Balcomb, with the aid of Mrs Bruce, art director, and Miss Hosmer, has succeeded making the play a revue of old England, especially in the scene of th Cratchets' Christmas dinner, and in the home of Frank Freeheart

The story of old Scrooge, th tight-fisted miser that detested the idea of Christmas until he had been visited by his partner from the spirit world and the ghost of Christmases past, present, and future is well known to everybody The jolly but poor Cratchet family and the gay and happy group gathered in the home of Frank Freeheart are typical of early nineteenth century England.

The part of old Scrooge, the miserable miser, is portrayed by Sam Enten. Calvin Wells is the lonely nephew. Frank Freehear is played by Leland Pence, while Donald Grieve is "Tiny Tim," the little cripple. Remaining members of the cast are: Mr. Cheerly George Kirkbride; Mr. Hearty Harry Gibson; Euston, Fred Danz Bob Cratchett, Ralph Morris; Sam Rousselle Smith; Peter, Fred Steen; Mrs. Freeheart, Carol Carrington; Ellen, Helen Coss; Mrs Cratchett, Virginia Allen. Th ghosts of past, present and future Christmases are played by Henry Potts, Paul Furbush and Floyd Harper. The ghost of old Marley, Scrooge's partner, is presented by Arthur Lampkin.

This Christmas entertainment is the annual gift to the community from Sequoia. No admission is charged.

The report indicates that there were 2,196,399 depositors.

The California boxing industry entered the ranks of "big business" in the 12 months just ended, with a total "gate" of approximately $2,500,000 and 1,695,749 paid admissions. Walter A. Yarwood, secretary to the State Athletic Commission, so announced last week in his annual report to Governor Young, covering the commission's third fiscal year, or the period from December 1, 1926, to November 30, 1927. During the fiscal year, Yarwood reported, 1,135 boxing shows were held and the commission collected as the State's "cut" $135,388.36.

The State of California, as big brothers to 18,000 crippled children, began functioning last week. The first child to come under the benefits of the Coombs Law, passed at the last legislature, was taken under the wing of the State in Bakersfield. The child was little Barbara Spriggs, 7, a victim of infantile paralysis, committed for care by Superior Judge Owen of Kern county. Under the law, if parent or guardian agrees and a diagnosis is made by a competent physician, a superior judge may commit a needy crippled child for care in an adequate hospital. The county is to pay the costs, and if the county fails to do so, the state stands behind the order with a $25,000 revolving fund that it loans to the county. Dr. Howard Markel, one of the State's leading orthopedists, will care for Barbara.

Presenting what he states is "the most accurate estimate possible," Dr. Charles T. Titus of the political science department of the University of California at Los Angeles, places the population of Los Angeles at 1,170,000 while crediting the entire state with 5,040,000. Doctor Titus' figures for Los Angles differ by 213,052 with the total announced by officials of the Los Angeles City Directory, who number the inhabitants of the city at 1,383,052.

Approximately three hundred units, including ninety huge floral floats and thirty bands, will make up the parade which is to be the chief attraction at the thirty-ninth annual Pasadena Tournament of Roses on January 2nd. In addition to the floats and bands, the parade will comprise an equestrian division, a novelty division and a division devoted to blossom-decked automobiles. All units will be floral in nature. The ninety floats in the parade will represent about forty Pacific Coast cities and communities, including several in Northern California, Oregon and Washington, according to tournament executives. "States and Nations in Flowers" will be the theme of the 1928 tournament. As in the past, every float must be a floral creation, and only fresh, natural flowers may be used. Born in 1889 as a small village fete, the Tournament of Roses long ago ceased to be merely a local event, and is now regarded as belonging to the entire Pacific Coast. It is said to have become one of the best-known annual festivals in the world.

Representatives of the chamber of commerce of sixteen California cities agreed last week upon area of 2,000 square miles and its population of 2,435,000, as the territory of the Los Angeles metropolitan district which would be recommended to the federal census bureau for the compiling of its 1930 economic survey. The area includes most of Los Angeles county and parts of San Bernardino, Orange and Riverside counties, and comprises a wedgeshaped area roughly eighty miles long and sixty miles wide at the base.

Oil field operations reported to State Oil and Gas Supervisor R. D. Bush during the week ended December 3, 1927, show 30 new wells started, compared with 36 during the previous week. Of the 30 notices to drill filed 11 were for wells in the Long Beach field, two in the Richfield field, two in the Huntington Beach field, one in Los Angeles county, six in the fields of Ventura county, one in the Goleta field, one in Santa Clara county, and five in the fields of Kern county. The total new wells this year is 1,148, compared with 1,227 at the same date last year.

Two Santa Clara county communities have joined the ranks of California cities with standardized traffic codes by adoption of the uniform traffic ordinance. They are Palo Alto and Santa Clara.

Commencing December 1, mail applications for 1928 automobile license plates began to pour in on the State division of motor vehicles at Sacramento. Although mail applications are being received no applications will be received over the counter at Sacramento or at any of the branches in the State until December 15, which is two weeks earlier than formerly. The fee is $3—the same as last year.

Bond certificates of the Republic of Ireland, valued at approximately $8,000, are to sent from California to New York this week. They accrue from the first external loan of the Republic, for which $25,000 was voluntarily subscribed in this State, and will be devoted to the Father York Memorial High School fund.

Plans for ratification by voters in November, 1928, of a bond issue of $6,000,000 to acquire additional state park lands were laid last week by the State Parks Council. The State Park Commission, consisting of William E. Colby, San Francisco; President Ray Lyman Wilbur of Stanford University; W. F. Chandler, of Fresno; Henry W. Melveny, Los Angeles, and Frederick R. Burnham, Los Angeles, pledged their aid. They will conduct a survey of the state's parks preliminary to the campaign.

The dome of California's State Capitol soon will be illuminated by a battery of flood lights if plans now being shaped by the department of finance materialize. A. H. Heron, director of the department, said that proposals to replace the 1,200 globes which now outline the dome with flood lights having a total of 32,000 watts are under consideration. He said that frequent replacement of the globes under the existing scheme of illumination is necessary, and that these replacements are both expensive, difficult and dangerous to make.

Shell-torn battle flags and other military emblems dear to the hearts of Californians are to have a magical renewal of life through the ministration of a modern Betsy Ross and a modern wash tub. According to A. H. Heron, director of finance, and Adjutant General R. E. Mittelstaedt, commander of the California National Guard, the rehabilitation work will be carried out until all of the fourteen flag relics of the Spanish-American conflict and sixteen treasured emblems of Civil War days have again been made whole and resplandent.

California motorists paid, through the 3-cent state gasoline tax, $9,035,934 into the state coffers during the first six months of this year, according to figures compiled by the American Motorists Association, in conjunction with the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads. The taxes represented the funds collected on the sale of 451,793,681 gallons of gasoline which were sold during the six months period. In both the sale of gasoline and in the gas tax collected, California lead the entire country, the compilation showed. Of the more than $9,000,000 collected in the state, $4,508,000 was expended on the state highway system within the state is is shown by the survey.

Santa Claus is going to give a million dollars' worth of presents to California war veterans this month. The State of California in this case will be Santa Claus, and approximately 220 former service men will be aided in the purchase of homes and farms, according to George M. Stout, secretary of the State Veterans' Welfare Board. The Christmas month purchases of the board, Stout said last week, will bring total expenditures in the veterans' aid program up to $18,800,000 since 1922.

Oral examinations for prohibition agents in Northern California and Nevada, who must qualify themselves for their positions under civil service rules before February 1, 1928, will be held at San Francisco next month by civil service examiners from Washington, according to word received at the Customs House last week. Written examinations for certification on the civil service lists have already been taken by the agents.

Are California's marriages under the three-day marriage license notice law of a more permanent character, and if they are, will this permanency compensate the State for the apparent decrease in marriages under the operation of the notice law? These questions L. E. Ross, statistician for the State Board of Health, would like to have answered. Ross is certain there has been a loss of 4,212 in marriage licenses issued in California during the first three months that the three-day notice law has been in effect. His figures show that during August, September and October only 11,160 licenses were issued, not including those issued in El Dorado, Glenn, Mariposa, Mono and Trinity counties during October. This total compares with 15,372 issued during the same three months of 1926.

Luther Burbank's "work-shop," the gardens on Santa Rosa avenue, Santa Rosa, where he carried on most of the early botanical experiments which made him famous, are to disappear into a real estate subdivision. This announcement was made by Mrs. Burbank, who now lives in the old home.

With more than seven carloads of automobile plates at hand, the State Division of Motor Vehicles has undertaken the annual task of re-licensing over 1,800,000 machines, and will begin receiving over the counters at Sacramento and branch offices on December 15.

A comprehensive census of all the blind in California, with a view to determining the effectiveness of the State agencies for their assistance and care, is to be taken at once, according to the announcement made at Sacramento last week by Mrs. Anna L. Saylor, director of the Department of Social Welfare.

Urging a rodent eradication campaign, the State Department of Public Health estimated last week that there are approximately 5,000,000 rats in California. The value of foodstuffs devoured by these rats was placed at $8,000,000 a year.

EASY LESSONS IN AUCTION BRIDGE

Secondary Bids

THE informatory double sometimes is used on the second round of bidding in a way which may need some explanation. If second hand doubles dealer's original bid either of a suit or no trump and third hand makes a bid, fourth hand will pass unless having a real assisting hand. If dealer now also passes and second hand still is desirous of forcing his partner to bid he will double again. This still would be an informatory double unless third hand's bid were two no trump.

The rules for assisting bids by third hand are somewhat altered after the first round of bidding:

To raise an original bid four assisting tricks are necessary; but after dealer raises his own bid third hand may assist when holding one less trick, (namely, three), and if dealer raises his own bid twice without hearing from his partner, the requirements for an assisting bid are lowered to two. In other words the greater the strength shown by dealer in raising his own bid, the less strength is required by third hand to make an assisting bid.

When third hand has overbid dealer's one no trump with a minor suit bid of two, the danger signal has been waved and dealer should not rebid the no trump unless he expects to win all of his tricks from his own hand.

If third hand has overbid by three of a minor suit it shows unusual strength and length and no re-entry card in other suits. In such case, if dealer has any one of the other three suits unprotected it would be far better for him to pass and allow the minor suit to win the declaration; but with no danger of opponents running another suit dealer should bid three no trump as this minor suit should be of great assistance to him, and a no trump should net a much better score than a minor.

If third hand overbids by two of a major suit it is again a showing of strength, and dealer should pass unless he has less than normal expectancy in that major; in which case he should bid two no trump.

Fourth Hand Bidding

After dealer has bid one no trump and second and third hands have passed, fourth hand often may find it advisable to bid two of a suit for the purpose of announcing his strong suit to his partner. This is called a lead-directing bid and is made with the expectation that dealer will overbid it by saying two no trump.

If the no trump declaration wins, second hand will lead this suit and by so doing often will enable the adversaries to win a trick or two which they could not otherwise have obtained. If dealer passes or changes his no trump bid to a suit, second hand must not credit his partner with original bidding strength, as such a lead-directing bid may be made on one or two tricks less.

After two rounds of bidding, rebidding in general is a good deal like bidding for the purchase of something at an auction sale. After one has bid what he thinks his hand is worth he is inclined to bid just one more because some one has overbid him. When one has a good strong hand for a certain bid he does not want to give up and let his opponent play the hand at something else against which most of his good cards will be worthless. In such situations many a hand is overbid tremendously, and frequently one side loses heavily. Here psychology enters the game and the one who wins most frequently is the one who can best estimate his opponents' mental processes and determine how high he can induce them to bid or how trustworthy their bids are. This is called psychology by some, pure bluff by others, and who shall say that it is right or wrong? We call a certain player shrewd—which does not mean that he understands the scientific principles of the game better than others, but that he reads his partner and his opponents and learns more from their bids than others could. Every Auction player should therefore try to gain as much information as possible from the manner of bidding of other players, and also to convey as little information as possible to his opponents by his manner.

Trial Not Necessary After the Election

President Roosevelt never turned a deaf ear to his Spanish war rough riders when they appealed to him for help. On one occasion a rough rider was indicted for killing a man in a western state and he wrote to the President, asking for a loan of $200 to hire a lawyer to defend him. The crime had taken place in some sort of ranch brawl. In keeping with his custom, the President sent the requested $200, never expecting to see it again. James Amos, former family servant of the Roosevelts, relates in an article in Collier's Weekly. However, a short time later, much to his surprise, he got another letter from the same man, returning the $200. The letter said in substance:

"Dear Teddy: I'm sending back the money I borrowed to help at my trial. We didn't need to have no trial, as we elected our district attorney."

Pottery Long in Use

The art of pottery is one of the most common and most ancient of all manufactures. It is abundantly evident that the Hebrews used earthenware vessels in the wilderness and that the potters' trade was afterward carried on in Palestine.

Just a Snap

When people declare they "don't care a fig," no reference to fruit is intended. "Fig" is from the Italian word "fico"—a snap of the fingers.

LOVER OF ANTIQUES

Friend—"Is your husband a lover of antiques?" Disgusted Wife—"My dear, haven't you ever seen our car?"

The Retort Courteous

A new jailer was astounded, on making his tour of the prison, to find one of the convicts busily at work at his barred window with a file.

"Hey!" roared the jailer. "What are you doing with that?"

"Oh," replied the prisoner airily. "just cuttin' me initials on one of the bars to kill time."

His Trouble

"What is the matter with your hired man, Amiz?" asked Farmer Fumblegate. "He looks somehow as if he was all run down."

"I guess," replied Farmer Bentover, "he is kinda overrested."

His Chance

The Rich One—I don't feel like my usual self today.

Poor Opportunist—Then how about lending me $10?

TIMELY AID

Hubby (rushing to table)—"I'm 'way behind with my dinner!" Wife—"Here's the catchup, dear."

But Not That Kind

Following a lesson in agriculture on the propagation of fruit trees a little girl was telling her mother about grafting.

"Who was the man who did so much grafting?" asked her mother.

Before the girl could answer her eight-year-old brother piped up, "I know, mother. It was John Turnipseed."

Delicate Work

Living Skeleton—Why do you have to keep yourself on such a strict diet?

Circus Lady—My job is to stand against the wall while my husband throws knives all around me.

Merely Premature

She—Funny thing happened at the wedding. When the bride came to the word "obey" she stuttered terribly.

He—Well, she might as well break her word one time as another.

ALL TOO LITTLE THOUGHT FOR OLD THINGS

THE mechanical developments of the last fifty years have made this a fast, an efficient, a mechanical and in some respects a thoughtless age. The desire seems to be more speed, to get there quicker, and to do more in less time. Device after device comes on the market each aimed at saving time and increasing speed; and each is superceded by something that will save more time and make greater speed.

In our rush and mad dash to get somewhere quick and at the same time get out of the way of someone else who is getting somewhere else even quicker we are apt to loose sight of one of the main objects of time saving, enjoyment.

It seems to us that people are not quite as content with what they have as they used to be when they had more time, and are not quite as thoughtful. Old customs which made life happy a few years ago are being rushed out of existence. So many people now are too busy to greet friends with a cheery "Merry Christmas," now that that happy day is approaching. The blessed phrase is now almost relegated to the fireside and one's own family and if breathed on the street is done so in a selfconscious manner as if the speaker were afraid that he would be thought old fashioned.

The old time carol singers are now only a memory, every one is too busy to be singing carols. We do not even hear of neighborhoor parties such as made pleasant spots in the memories of years gone by. Old and pleasant customs one by one are being rushed out of existence. We live faster, go farther, see more and do more than our parents ever dreamed of. But sometimes, especially as the Christmas season swings around, we look back to days when people had more time, and things did not move with quite such celerity.

OLD NATURE, MOTHER OF US ALL

SPEAKING recently to a group of businessmen, Dr. Aurelia Reinhart, president of Mills College, said: "No religion ever has been created out of the big bustling city. Religion has come from the environs of nature." Dr. Reinhart might have gone further and said that all that is great and pure and true in human nature finds strength and freshness in the greatest—the purest—the truest of kinships, that of man with nature.

Whether we derive our particular form of religion from the Chaldean shepherds who watched their flocks at night two thousand years ago, or their Celtic kinsmen of Albion who at this time of the year adored Hu and Beal, the father in the shade of the spreading English oak; the Persian Magi who saw in the alternate setting and rising of the sun and changing of the seasons the parallel to the good and evil influences which surround man, or even their common ancestors who watched the seven bright stars as they circle the pole, and conceived the pole star to be the ultimate symbol of God's strength and stability, matters little All saw in nature a power above and beyond their comprehension; a power benign but undefinable.

This groping after a truer understanding of nature, and the response of a higher nature to the soul of all being has been the light which illumined the rough and rugged road which mankind has trod from the days of the mastadon to these of the radio and aeroplane, and is the light which all mankind, whether consciously or unconsciously, is still seeking.

Before the next issue of the Times-Gazette goes to press, the sun, that old hero of myth and fantasy, will have completed another circle of the eclyptic and our earth, after having made its journey of more than 322,000,000 miles, will again be off on another lap of its endless journey through space. More than 365 days have gone by since the constellations of the evening sky appeared as they will tonight. The stars are changeless, at least in human time, but we change constantly. Worry, greed, envy—each has its influence upon our lives. But in nature, the great he.ler of souls, all but the great, the good and the true disappear like the winter snow beneath the vernal sun.

WHEN SHOPPING— think of telephone convenience.

At this season, multitudes of minds are centered on a common thought—the spirit of giving. And so, despite the plea of merchants to "shop early", crowds of eager people fill our streets and stores in a hurried, last minute search for gifts.

To avoid the bustling crowds, many clear thinking people turn to the telephone to help them locate just the gift they are looking for; or when time is a factor, to make or rearrange social engagements, to call the folks at home if they are delayed, and for many other uses both at this season and throughout the year.

Public telephones are located everywhere for your convenience.

CALIFORNIA RANKS SECOND IN NUMBER OF AUTOMOBILES

Paved Highways and Good Climate Account For Large Registration

By CLEM WHITAKER

SACRAMENTO, December 15—"One in every three has it," says Frank G. Snook, chief of the State Motor Vehicle Department, and by the end of 1928 the ratio will be far greater.

The disease, Snook explains, is motoritis, an insidious thing that only motorized equipment can ameliorate.

At any rate, men have lauched on an automobile buying orgy in California and ladies are generally afflicted with accelerator leg, or something like that, from much stepping on the gas.

The registration for the new year, Snook predicts, will show 2,000,000 motor vehicles in California by the close of 1928, with the probability that California will forge into first place among the states in number of machines.

California, according to the government official, is now surpassed in motor vehicle registration only by New York and would exceed the famous Empire State except for the great number of trucks and other commercial vehicles in the city of New York.

Such large centers of population as Illinois and Pennsylvania have less motor vehicles registered than California, according to the comparative reports filed with Snook.

The 1927 registration, though complete figures are still unavailable, will total approximately 1,900,00, a gain of some 100,000 cars in the last twelve months. And of the total registration about 1,500,000 are listed as pleasure cars.

If Snook knows his motor vehicles, some 200,000 new automobiles will be purchased in California during the coming twelve months, exclusive of those purchased to replace cars that refuse to run in 1928.

"An all-year motoring climate and the greatest system of paved highways in the world," said Snook, "are undoubtedly big contributing factors to California's attack of motoritis.

"The California motorist, it should also be mentioned, never lacks for something worth seeing on his auto tour. But probably another factor just as important, is the fact that California has the money with which to buy automobiles. Our per capita wealth is much greater than in the nation at large and an automobile, to the Californian, has long since joined the list of necessities."

All of which seems to indicate that Henry Ford will have a good year in California, not to mention the 57 other auto manufacturers.

And speaking of automobiles, now's the time to do your license shopping, the motor vehicle chief points out. Counter deliveries of plates started yesterday, Dec. 15, with the branch offices of the State Motor Vehicle department and scores of auto club offices prepared to handle the greatest rush of applicants in the state's history.

Snook declares that mail applications are already pouring in and advises that the busy man or woman will find it easier to mail in his fee than to stand in line at a counter.

"The proceedure is simple," Snook says. "Take your certificate registration out of your car, make changes of address, if any, and put it in an envelope with your fee and send it to the Sacramento office. Use checks, money orders, or bank drafts—not currency. The fee for a passenger car is $3."

Tardy motorists will face a double fee after expiration of the legal renewal period.

IDLE ISLAND

By ETHEL HUESTON

STORY FROM THE START

On the verge of nervous collapse, due to overwork, Gay Delane, successful New York artist, seeks rest at Idle Island. She rents a cottage, the "Lone Pine," from an island character, the "Captain," and his sister, Alice Andover, "administrator." Gay finds the cottage is tenanted by an elderly lady, "Auntaimiry," who consents to move to another abode, the "Apple Tree." Awaking from sleep, Gay imagines she sees the face of a Chinaman peering in the window.

Roused by this rude thought from the sweet fantasy of dreams, she got up from the couch, and felt about her with outstretched groping hands. Deciding logically, to follow the walls until she came to the kitchen door, knowing she would find matches over the kitchen gas stove, she crept along the wall to the left, working her way, hand following hand, until she found them at last, struck two together, hurriedly, and was glad to have the full light of electricity flooding the room. Doors and windows stood open to the night as when Auntaimiry left in the afternoon. But on consulting her watch, Gay was amazed to find it was the hour of midnight.

"Well, I slept," she said philosophically.

On the kitchen table she found her basket of groceries, and feeling somewhat refreshed she took a real interest in unpacking its contents and arranging the neatly on shelves in the little wall cupboard. Carefully she closed and locked the doors and windows.

She opened a can of prepared soup and heated it, made toast, opened a jar of pickles.

For the first time since she left New York, she was sufficiently rested to feel a mental reaction to her environment.

She arranged her modest supper on a tray, and took it to the wall-seat by the window which looked down over the bay. The wriggling, wrinkling lines of many little colored lights in the black showed where boats rode out the night at anchor. Intermittently the black was mellowed, turned to white mist, by the sliding rays of a lighthouse searchlight.

"Nice," she said to herself, "I like it. I'm glad I came. Auntaimiry is a dear, the Captain is a lamb, and that administrator person who tries to be so very bossy is a kind, sweet, generous fraud."

Remembering then that she had not yet so much as seen the upper story of her new home, she left the tray in the window, and, cup of soup in her hand, went up at once to explore, switching on the lights of the stairway from the lowest step. She found it modest enough above the stairs, but clean and fresh, all to her liking. There was a large closet on the landing, and to the left, a nicely appointed bathroom. The bedroom was large and cheerfully bright in furnishing, a bed, an old bureau, a commode and two small chairs matching.

Her natural energy somewhat restored by the long sleep, Gay carried her bags upstairs and unpacked them, folding the little silken garments away into drawers that smelled sweetly of cedar. She had brought with her nothing but the sheerest necessities for wearing. Her weariness had been so great that her only desire, her only thought, had been to escape, escape from work, escape from the city, find rest.

Gay Delane, not a New Yorker by birth, had become one by labor. Work was her daily bread. She counted accomplishment the end of life, success its great reward. With Gay Delane there was no interest as to one's possession, from whence one came, nor from what family line had sprung. The sole point of personality to her was this: "What is he doing? What has he done?"

The death of both parents in quick succession had thrown her upon her own resources at the age of seventeen. The last of the family funds, the insurance, all had gone into a final year of practical preparation for life-work, in which, with the incongruously blended driving of necessity and desire, she had studied stenography, and at the same time continued her classes in art under the best teachers obtainable.

"I've got to work—but I am going to paint," she said.

From the strictly clerical work she had been obliged to accept at first, bread-and-butter work she called it, she had gradually worked away from it, getting into things more to her taste and her talent, and at last, when she was able, abandoning it altogether. Black and white copies of style figures, fashion pages, hack work of illustration, all grist to Gay; and always, through the formative years, she kept some hours, mostly at night and on Sunday, for more advanced study.

For the definite business of earning a living, she had a remunerative connection with the advertising house of Burnham and Morey, for whom she did conventional paintings in bright colors at their order. The work not only paid very well, but was varied in type, usually interesting, and exercised the artistic virtues of a quick eye and finger for striking color effects. But always, besides this, she kept on, studying better things, painting in all her hours of leisure the things her heart desired.

From the day she had entered upon the study of stenography, in her seventeenth year, Gay had never allowed herself time for a full and complete vacation, sufficient to give both soul and body recuperation. She said she hadn't time, there was too much to learn, too much to do. Even her one memorable trip abroad, although it continued over a year, had afforded her no rest, for in addition to her studies she had taken with her also a contract for a series of pictures for the Sunday Magazine, so that she returned to New York at last afire with zeal, aflame with ambition, and far less rested than when she went.

But outraged flesh and violated nerves claimed their revenge at last for the eleven years' defiance. For fully six months before the final June torrent of heat forced her into full surrender, she had been a prey to quivering nerves that jangled in a jaded body, and when the inevitable forced itself upon her, she accepted it with a certain joy. If she must rest, she would make that rest a sport. If she must go into retirement, the exile should be a luxurious one. Perhaps—who knew?—even on a good little island of idleness might lurk some stimulant for an ardent though flagging spirit. Adventure perhaps, amusement certainly, or even—ah, Romance!

Gay, most ardent of free-soul advocates, decrying though she did the hampering confines of marriage, turned always sensitive heart-string to the strumming fingers of Romance.

Marriage, Gay argued, was not designed for the ambitious worker. For the complacent, for the self-satisfied, for the indolent, all very well; perhaps; but marriage and ambition, passion for accomplishment, were never messmates. Gay's first romance, tender sweet blossom of her ardent young womanhood, joyously promised the full fruitage of marriage "when the war is over," lay buried with the soldier who did not come back. And Gay's first passion of grief soon subsided into a philosophical reflection that perhaps after all it was better so, that she was not domestic, not the type for humdrum home life. That experience confirmed her in her determination to live alone.

Ah, if on the good and idle island should come a fresh awakening for her stilled affections!

"Lumley Lane, for instance," she thought whimsically. "Lumley, the lobster-man. A stern and silent nature, bronzed and bearded."

She smiled to herself as she turned out the lights and slipped into bed. The room was steeped in the essence of evergreen. Gay slept, glad for the silence of the Idle Island.

Next morning she wrote a note to her friend, Nancy Moore, asking to have her easel crated and shipped to her, with her paints, her canvases, any many of the pretty useful things of her studio which would add to the charm of her new home.

"It is the Land of Leisure," she wrote, "the Land of Emotional Leisure. It is Idle Island, the World of Wasted Effort, the Center of Silence. Every one works, but the work amounts to nothing. Every one is intensely busy, but it is the business of passing time. Every one is persistently intent on doing, but it is the doing of nothing at all. Soft, slow, unhurried—"

"Hallo!" It was a human voice that boomed out upon the silence like a neighboring foghorn that aroused Gay from the mellow mildness of her picture.

She ran to the door, startled at the sudden vocal crash in the stillness, startled more greatly when she saw the ferocious apparition at her door. An immense man, a monster of a man, with a tuft of bristling orange-colored beard, and a great shock of bristling orange-colored hair, and a great round face like a giant orange, with pink-rimmed pale blue eyes.

"Hallo," he boomed again, with a broad pink smile of greeting.

"H-hullo," stammered Gay.

"Lobsters" he shouted. "Auntaimiry says lobsters."

"Ah, yes." A fleeting reminiscent smile for the Lobster-man of her fancies. "You are the Lobster-man?"

"Yup. That's me. Lumley Lane. How many?"

She told him to bring her a lobster twice a week.

"Lobsters," he shouted, "run about fifty or sixty cents."

Lumley said his woman would boil them for her without extra charge. He frowned portentously. "She'll boil them, that is, long as she's able. She's—expecting."

"Expecting?" Gay echoed faintly.

"Yup. Increase!" His facetious grin was illuminating.

"Oh, how nice!"

"Well, yes. Unexpected. Very. Been married twenty year now. Nothin' doin'. All of a sudden—yup, there you are!—She's skeered," he volunteered cheerfully. "She's afeerd o' dyin'. She says it a'n't according to natur'."

"Oh, tell her not to be frightened," Gay comforted. "It often happens. And is there a hospital on the island?"

"She won't go to no hospital. She says she don't trust these newfangled nurses, highty-tighty. She'd rather trust to the women comin' in, the old way."

"If I am here then I'll be glad to help, if I can," Gay offered generously. "I was in the hospital for five months during the war, in training, and I'm not a bit highty-tighty."

"Well, now, that's real neighborly, miss. First-rate. I'll tell my woman you said so. She'll be countin' on ye."

"Oh, I am quite expert with babies. It was the only thing they had time to teach us before the war ended. They seemed to think the army wasn't going to do much but increase the population."

Lumley Lane burst into a loud haw-haw, and set off down the hill.

Gay ran to her desk and added a postscript to her letter to Nancy Moore.

"I am not going to have an affair with the lobster-man, after all, dear. He is not as stern and silent as I expected. Besides, he is expecting."

CHAPTER III

Midsummer was gala time for all the chilly little islands of the North.

Every day the Community house on the bay shore beneath Gay's grassy hill slope was open for bridge and tea, and every Saturday night offered its New England shore dinner, followed by dancing to the strains of a real jazz orchestra with saxophone accompaniment, playing the popular song hits of the season not more than twice removed. There were auto parties, boating parties, beach parties, bathing parties. At dusk every fine night she could count the slithery tires of half a dozen or more shore parties, where clams were baking, potatoes roasting, or lobsters broiling.

But Gay did not share in the gayety and the summer holiday life of the island. She reveled in rest, in freedom from the nervous pressure of an impatient city jogging her elbow. When her easel and paints arrived, she installed a studio in one corner of the big bright living room of the Lone Pine, and felt at peace with the world.

Auntaimiry was her friend. Auntaimiry was everybody's friend. She was a sort of unendowed institution, she went with the island. But although Auntaimiry no longer worked for a living, not as we speak of working for a living, she earned her keep, because she did what she could. Whenever there was fruit to can in the house of a native islander, jelly to make, or tomatoes to pickle, Auntaimiry, although not hired for the occasion, was always there, always at work.

For fifty years, she had presided at the arrival of all the small expected-ones around Evergreen. She had sat up with the sick, mourned with the sad, wept over the dead. She kept everybody's children while mothers went shopping, played bridge, or had more children.

And for all these things, as Auntaimiry gave in service, she was paid in kind. Winter apples, potatoes, squashes, jellies and canned fruit filled her larder. She had a charge account at the Pier grocery store, but her monthly bills were rendered, not to her, but to the administrator, as was right.

Auntaimiry had her own bank account, too. It was a small bank account, but like the widow's oil and meal it never diminished, but rather grew a little, curiously, now and then, its nucleus was her identical bank account of thirty years before, when she was obliged after a severe illness to give up, once and forever, all actively remunerative labor.

No one, however, considered Auntaimiry an object of charity nor did she so consider herself. She did what she could. She received what she needed.

"Why, it is socialism," Gay cried enthusiastically. "The very principle of socialism, applied, effective and practical!"

But Mrs. Andover drew herself up coldly. "Not by any means," she said sternly. "Such an idea! Socialism is one of those new-fangled notions brought over from Russia or one of those bolshevik countries. We don't hold to such things on our island."

* * * * * * * *

With the familiar and much loved paraphernalia of her profession about her, and with all of her pretty personal possessions to soften the rugged austerity of her surroundings, Gay settled down with comfortable anticipations of long and lovely leisure for leisurely work. Every day she went out for a long walk through the shivering little forest that backed the cottage, and down to the rocky shore, and as strength returned, her spirit of adventure quickened also. Each day she fared farther, always with greater joy, and daily during steeper cliffs and rougher walls of rock.

Comprising in all some seven hundred acres, the island had originally been occupied exclusively by three families of sturdy seafaring stock: the Wallaces, the McAndlers and the Marlings. The first settler of all was the grandfather of the present Captain. He, always referred to as the First Captain Wallace, had come there with his sons and daughters, his servants and his boats, and settled down to carry on a wide and prosperous fish and lobster traffic, incidental to his sailing trade. His children had married, cottages sprang up in the woods and the wild growth every year was pushed farther and farther back to make way for gardens, orchards and lawns.

Others came to the island, some for holidays, some in service, and married, and remained. The early teachers of the little public school grew old in labor, and retired to private life, but did not go away. Lobster trappers came for a season, and settled for life. Later, as modern conveniences added comfort to island life, many who were engaged in clerical or professional work in Portland built permanent homes near the ferry landing, and crossed the bay to their work in the morning, and back to their island homes at night.

While many of the later generations of Wallace had gone into professional work and removed to other states, many also remained on the island, where they had married and intermarried, so that fully half the native population was linked up together by ties of blood or marriage, and oftentimes by both, a network so intricate that only the more obvious forms of relationship were given acknowledgement.

The island was three or more miles in length, barely one mile wide, a rugged line of rock fronting the Atlantic along the east, and drifting down gradually to a slow low valley slope of emerald green on the bay shore. A motor road led up from the landing beyond the Captain's house, and there at the bend, turned backward along the shore. But leading the other way, into the forest, were only dwindling trails. In the foreground of the forest lay a long row of pretty summer houses, fringing the woods and looking off down the grassy slope to the bay.

Gossip is nothing to speak of.

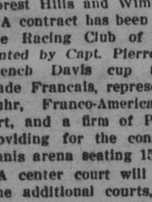
O'Farrell Glad to Drop Reins

THE hot stove circuit warmed up a few squawks, following the announcement that Bill McKechnie had been made manager of the Cardinals for 1928 and O'Farrell returned to the catching end. "Queer bird, this Breadon," was the tenor of the conversation. "He fired a manager who won him a world's championship, last year; now he cans the man who engineered a club of cripples into second place, after a close and fighting finish. Is he balmy in the belfry or what?"

Bill McKechnie.

Breadon's answer is briefly: "I'm unwilling to spoil a great catcher and a ball player by trying to make him do two things at the same time—manage and catch. With nothing on his mind but his job, I expect O'Farrell to be the same great player he was in 1926 when he handled 147 games and was a vast help to my pitchers."

In support of Breadon's belief that managing is harmful to a player, one notes that Hornsby had about the worst playing season of his career in the year 1926 and O'Farrell experienced a similar slump in the year 1927. If O'Farrell regains his 1926 catching form, Breadon will have been justified in making the move.



Bob O'Farrell.

McKechnie, on the other hand, will have an onerous task. He will have to compete with the records of Hornsby and O'Farrell, both of whom delivered the goods in the matter of placing the team well at the season's finish.

McKechnie will have a better outfit than either Hornsby or O'Farrell led and, on paper, ought to finish one, two, three, even with the breaks against him.

O'Farrell said he was glad to turn the reins over to Bill McKechnie, who was his assistant last season. McKechnie, former manager of the Pittsburgh Pirates, has begun reorganization of his line-up. Jimmy Ring and Flint Rhem, pitchers, and Lester Bell, third baseman, are "tradable material," he said. Allan Sothoron will be retained as coach.

Ernie Nevers Only Grid Star to Make Baseball

While many have tried, Ernie Nevers, the big California fullback who leads the Duluth pro eleven, is the only All-American gridder who made good in the major baseball leagues.

Seems queer that with all the college men who do break into pro baseball and make good that there have not been more All-Americans but Nevers, who has pitched for the St Louis Browns for two years, is the only one who has made the grade.

Ernie is one of those quiet boys, something on the type of Joe Sewell, reads considerably, gets to bed early and tries to get all the sleep he can so as to carry on.

Ernie lets his neckties do his talking. In fact, he wears the loudest ties in the American league. One of his fellow players once remarked:

"Ernie, I think you have all the college colors in the country in those ties of yours."

"If I haven't," admitted Ernie, "it's because some college started up since I bought my last scarf."

And Ernie also goes bareheaded the year round.

Paris Will Construct Large Tennis Stadium

Final contests in 1928 for the Davis cup, premier trophy of tennisdom, with the city of Paris as custodian, will be held in an amphitheater worthy of comparison with Forest Hills and Wimbledon.

A contract has been signed between the Racing Club of France, represented by Capt. Pierre Gillou of the French Davis cup team, and the Stade Francais, represented by Allen Muhr, Franco-American tennis expert, and a firm of Paris architects providing for the construction of a tennis arena seating 15,000.

A center court will be built, with nine additional courts, and the cost will reach about 2,000,000 francs (about $80,000).

"We must keep the Davis cup here for at least five years to get our money back," said Captain Gillou, "but at any rate there is no reason why Paris, the premier city of the world on the tennis court, should be behind New York or London in tennis accommodation."

One Olympic Hope

The photograph shows Schouscheanoff, Russia's champion sprinter. He has defeated all comers in the 100 meters class and is Russia's hope in the coming Olympic games.

Plan to Tour Orient

University of Oregon athletic authorities are negotiating for a tour of Hawaii and Japan for its tennis and swimming teams in the summer of 1929. Bradshaw Harrison, a tennis letterman of the University of California is a transfer student who will be eligible to play with the Eugene netmen next season. Johnny Anderson, ex-national interscholastic sprint champion, is the outsanding swimmer and will be eligible for the trip.

Star Refuses Job

"Chick" Shiver is one college baseball star who doesn't care to take a fling at major league baseball.

Shiver, captain of this year's baseball team at the University of Georgia, has turned down several offers from major league clubs.

He is an outfielder and was the hardest hitter with nearly a .400 average on the Georgia team last year. He plans a business career, and it is more than likely that he will locate in Atlanta.

PLAYED TENNIS FOR FUN OF IT

Helen Wills Shunned Tediousness of Practice.

Helen Wills, the twenty-one-year-old women's amateur tennis champion, has re-established herself on the women tennis throne, which she was forced to vacate last year following a major operation.

A little over five years ago, when only sixteen years old, this modern Helen from Sunny California gave promise of becoming the greatest figure in the game. In 1923, before her successful conquest in the American singles championship, Miss Wills defeated Kathleen McKane, the champion of England. This marked triumph extracted favorable comment from the world's leading critics and great possibilities were predicted for the Berkeley girl. They were realized when Mrs. Molla Mallory, the holder of the American crown for the past five years, was routed by Helen in the finals of the American singles in exactly 20 minutes.

Last winter, following an operation for appendicitis, it was a matter of conjecture whether Miss Wills would again be able to ascend to national heights in netdom. In a small hotel tournament in California in March, the Berkeley girl proved herself strong enough to begin her campaign for lost prestige. Not only did she regain her American title by defeating the brilliant young Betty Nuthall, but annexed a score of foreign and domestic laurels which made her absolute mistress in the sport among amateurs.

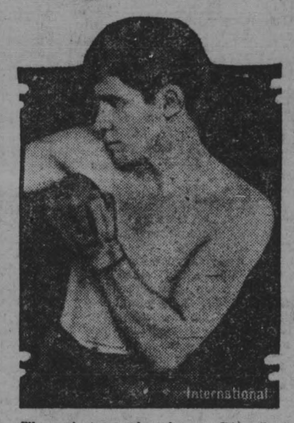
Helen Wills is vitally interested in the development of the game among young women. Concerning the sport, she said that playing "for the fun of it" is sufficient for all young girls to take up tennis. The story of Miss Wills on the court is one of especial encouragement to young players who dislike the discipline of instruction. For, like Topsy, Miss Wills "just growed" into a tennis player.

"I played for fun. I practiced by engaging in matches and not by bouncing a ball against the barn door. I played against those who could show me the simple principle of position and strokes."

Miss Wills delighted in playing men players in the early stages of her training. They play a stronger and better game and the benefit derived is threefold.

The story of her rapid rise in tennis, Miss Wills says, could become the story of any American girl who will combine "fun" with earnestness in playing the sport. Miss Wills especially advocates the participation in tournaments by young stars.

Big Jewish Boxer



The photograph shows Big Jack Gross, Jewish heavyweight boxer, who will be exploited by Tex Rickard, matchmaker, with a view toward possible championship contendership.

Cleveland Indians to Be Revamped for 1928

The Cleveland club of the American league is one of several clubs that must be completely remodeled if any sort of a showing next year is hoped for.

The pitching staff excepted, only two players are certain of a regular berth. They are Luke Sewell, one of the best catchers in either league, and Joe Sewell, who has few superiors at short.

Luke had one of his best years last season. Joe slipped defensively, largely due to the fact that he seldom had the same combination working with him at second and third.

Three positions in the infield and three in the outfield must be considered as open to the most competent performers.

Dempsey-Paulino Fight Now Rumored as Likely

Efforts to bring about a match between Jack Dempsey and Paulino, the Basque woodchopper, materialized somewhat when the boxers conferred with Tex Rickard.

The former heavyweight champion agreed to meet Paulino conditionally, while Paulino expressed a willingness for the tilt with assurance that he will be the man eventually to decide if Dempsey is qualified for a third meeting with Gene Tunney, the champion in the division.

Rickard will try to find suitable opponents for Paulino in his heavyweight elimination tourney before pitting him against Dempsey. Details concerning the proposed match were not announced.

Harvester Filly Leads

The Harvester, 2:01, former world champion trotting stallion that has won great renown in the stud, had the honor of siring the two-ear-old that won the most races the past season. This is the fast filly, Shirley Harvester, 2:09¾, which won every race she started in during the season and that handled every trotter her age she met during the season with great ease. The Harvester filly will no doubt be brought East next season.

POULTRY

ALL-MASH FEED GOOD FOR EGGS

Poultry keepers who have used the all-mash method of feeding chicks and growing pullets may continue the method for laying pullets. The plan has proved satisfactory for fall and winter egg production at the Ohio experiment station, and is being used by many successful poultrymen.

The only change in the all-mash for egg production, according to D. C. Kennard, station poultryman, is to increase the meat scraps from 5 to 10 per cent and decrease the corn from 70 to 65 per cent. Coarsely ground wheat may be used instead of middlings in the mash. And for best results, Mr. Kennard would also use milk in some form.

Success with all-mash feeding the laying pullets, especially for winter eggs, is largely determined by the kind of mixture and manner of feeding it. The mash should be as granular as possible rather than dusty ground. A suitable type of feeder should provide 20 to 24 feet of sitting space per 100 pullets. Fresh mash should be fed daily in the evening, the amount being about what will be consumed during the next 24 hours.

Electric lights may be used to advantage. A warm, moist mash fed in the evening, especially in cold weather, may prove beneficial.

Details relative to the all-mash method of feeding layers may be had by writing the Ohio experiment station at Wooster.

Laying Hens Must Have Ration Rich in Protein

During the course of twelve months a high-laying hen will produce from 18 to 25 or more pounds of eggs—or from four to seven or more times her own body weight, depending upon the weight of the hen. And it is a well-known fact that eggs are high in percentage of protein. Logically, therefore, it follows that laying hens must be fed a ration which is rich in protein if they are to turn out this amount of protein-rich product and still maintain the muscle, bone and blood in their own bodies.

Home-grown grains, such as wheat, oats, barley and corn, while they do contain a certain proportion of protein, all rank as carbohydrate-rich feeds, necessary to maintain body flesh and provide heat and energy, but lacking in sufficient proportion of protein to meet the requirements of heavy egg production. Millfeeds, such as bran and shorts, contain proportionately more protein than do whole grains, but they, likewise, fail to supply the needed amount. If the ration fed to laying hens contains these feeds only, without the addition of some protein-rich supplement, the hens cannot expect high egg production, the hen simply cannot produce eggs but can only turn the carbohydrates into surplus body fat.

Specialist Tells How to Get Better Eggs

Care used in the mating of pullets and in the selection of hatching eggs will in a short time develop a flock that produces practically no loose eggs, says L. M. Black, extension specialist in poultry husbandry, at the college of agriculture of Rutgers university.

Experiment has shown that certain characters are transmitted to future layers through the egg. The pullet that is hatched from any particular egg tends to lay the same type egg as that from which she came. Shrewd poultrymen take advantage of this fact and select only typical, well uniformly colored eggs when setting the incubator. Since sires, too, exert an influence upon the type of egg laid by the pullets, males selected for the breeding pens are from ancestors that were noted for their heavy production of large, uniformly colored and shaped eggs.

There is an old German adage which when translated reads, "As the bird, so is the egg." It probably was not originated for poultrymen alone, but it holds great significance for them.

Vitamines for Fowls

Vitamines should not worry the good poultryman so much in summer as in winter. Green foods and sunshine supply the vitamines that are most apt to be lacking in the winter ration. During the early spring months these factors are apt to be lacking unless the poultryman takes special pains to see that the birds have green stuff and sunshine. Alfalfa leaves, when put in a rack where fowls may eat them, will help to supply the need for green material.

Sunlight Helps Hens

Direct sunlight will help the hens to lay strong shelled eggs as well as eggs with a high degree of hatchability. If hens have been closed up they should be turned out into the sunshine on bright days. It is necessary to keep them closed up, then the windows should be thrown open during the middle of the day so the direct rays of the sun may get in. Glass substitutes may also be used in place of some of the window glass to let in more.

Culling a Flock

If the birds are being culled very closely with the idea of keeping only the highest producers, then all those in the doubtful class should be disposed of. If only the unusually poor birds are to be sold, then those showing uncertain characteristics should be kept. Any person who will examine a few hens, keeping in mind the characteristics of the good producer, as opposed to those of the poor producer, should be able to cull satisfactorily.

The Parting Guest

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

RACHEL has been on her vacation visiting her relatives. She is going back to take up the household duties which have been carried on by some one else during her absence, but those whom she is leaving, as is common in such cases, are urging her to stay longer. A host can scarcely do anything else in such a case. She's had a good time, she admits to herself, but she's about talked out, and, anyway, it's better when making a visit to leave behind a little grief than a lot of relief.

Years ago—so many, in fact, that I should have forgotten the circumstances wholly—a distant relative of father's who lived in the city was invited to spend the week with us. We were living on a farm, there was much work to be done daily, and the house was small. The woman came with her three children, the oldest six, as I recall, the youngest a baby in arms. They entailed a good deal of extra work, but mother did not mind that for a time. But the one week stretched out into two, and the two into four, and the four into six, and still there was no indication that our guests were contemplating kissing us good-by. Finally mother had to say—and it was the truth—that she could no longer delay a promised visit to my sister, who lived some distance from us and who was ill. There was no grief, but considerable relief when our visitor left us. You might suppose that they would never have come back again, but they did. They liked it, I guess.

It isn't an easy matter to know when best to end a call or a visit. It is a good deal like making a speech, I think. One should stop talking just when the audience is interested and alert and wishing you would go on. It is fatal to talk until they begin to wonder when you are going to stop.

Hilda was one of the most satisfactory guests we ever had in our house. She never made us a visit unless she was invited, and when she came she was so much a part of the household that it seemed as if she had always been with us.

"I'm going to stay just a week," she would say. "I know you must have other plans to be carried out, and I've had guests enough in our house to realize what a comfort it is, no matter how much you like them, to know when they're going. You can get ready to kiss me good-by a week from today."

We were always sorry to see her go, but we were never able to persuade her to stay beyond the announced time.

"I want to come back some time, and I want you to be glad to see me rather than wondering how long I'm going to stay this time."

If only all guests would learn when to go!

Chic in Sports

This interesting sports ensemble, worn by Mary Astor, First National player, consists of a gray Angora sweater showing smartly striped effects in gray and black. The silky skirt worn with it is of a gray background with dull red and black stripes. A silk scarf worn in Deauville fashion with a red border adds a chic note when combined with a velour hat of simple outline.

Woman Chief of Seminoles

Wewoka, Okla.—Mrs. Alice B. Davis, first woman chief of an Indian tribe, now is the seventy-five-year-old "guide, philosopher and friend" of 3,100 Seminole tribesmen, whom she ruled for two brief periods in 1922.

She frequently appears in the District court here as an interpreter in litigation involving the oil lands of the Seminoles.

Her father, John F. Brown, a Scotch physician and graduate of the University of Edinburgh, had come to the United States as a surgeon during the Civil war. At that time he married Lucy Red Beard, a Seminole.

A son became chief of the tribe and won the title of "Governor" Brown. After the latter's death, his sister Alice was appointed by President Harding to serve as chief for one day in order to complete business which her brother had left unfinished. A month later she was reappointed in order to sign authoritatively a deed in behalf of the Seminole nation. The deed called for the transfer of Emahaka mission to a private individual.

A school for Seminole girls, the mission had been condemned and abandoned and the federal government wished to dispose of it. Mrs. Davis refused to sign the deed. She contended that the land had been sold without the consent of the tribe and that the Indians received no part of the purchase price. For her refusal she was immediately "separated" from her position as chief of the tribe.

Her retirement to private life by no means lessened her activities. She keeps a record of births, deaths and marriages among her people and is always prepared to supply information to a fellow Seminole who wishes to prove his claim to oil rights.

The federal government has sent Mrs. Davis to Florida three times in the last generation to act as interpreter in trials involving Seminoles.

After being educated in Indian missions, the daughter of the Scotch physician and the Seminole maiden became the wife of a white man, George Davis. She is the mother of eleven children.

No Surplus Weight

To reduce weight or keep it down, get a job as a football official. Walter Eckersall, who helped run the recent Army-Notre Dame game, told a friend: "You'll be surprised, but my weight is exactly the same as when I played football, and that's 144 pounds stripped."

Built to Accommodate Family

Miami Elks, in preparation for the national meeting of the order in their city next year, are getting together some big things, including this "biggest chair in the world," occupied in the photograph by the executive council and a few others. It is made entirely of wicker, holds 22, weighs half a ton, and is nine feet high.

Was Giant Tusker

Omaha, Neb.—They've found a new elephant out here in Nebraska. Dr. Henry Fairfield Osborn, famous paleontologist of New York, says it's a real discovery and that nothing like it has ever been found before.

The new elephant is built along the lines of a steam shovel. Its great tusks extend straight out in front and the ends are shaped just like a shovel. These tusks extend from the lower jaw and from the joint they measure seven feet. The length of the lower jawbones of the largest mammoth elephants heretofore known is less than two feet.

Dr. E. H. Barbour, head of the paleontological department of the University of Nebraska, and curator of the university museum, says the animal walked the earth some 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 years ago.

Dug Up In Nebraska.

This particular type of elephant, which has been named "Amedelodon Fricki," used to roam the Nebraska plains. The individual skeleton has just been found in Frontier county, this state, and is now in the museum of the University of Nebraska. Only the lower jaw, the huge tusks, tremendous teeth, still in place in the jawbone, a rib and a toe bone have been found, but the expedition from the University of Nebraska is now searching Frontier county for other traces of the big fellow who carried a spade like a steam shovel out in front of him as he walked.

The ends of the two tusks are set very close together, making practically a broad, straight continuous line across the end where the "spade" comes in contact with the earth. The huge molars measure nine inches long and are still firmly set in the jawbone. These molars are in perfect condition, and the tusks have the density and other marks of true ivory. The specimen is perfect.

The gigantic combination of steam shovel and animal just discovered tilled the Nebraska prairies and turned the sod over with as perfect an ivory shovel and plow as can be imagined. In the days that the big fellow roamed the earth Nebraska was either the shores of an ocean or was a great inland sea. The "steam shovel" was used to turn the sod, dig up food such as seaweed from beneath the waters, or for excavating in mud or loose earth and sand in its search for food.

Mystery About Tusks.

The end of the jawbone proper into which the heavy tusks are set is a comparatively light bone, seeming not nearly strong enough to stand the heavy strain which might be supposed to have been exerted in the heavy digging of which the shovel tusks would be capable. This peculiarity makes something of a mystery out of the use of the tusks. Doctor Barbour hazards the guess that as the great mammoth dug, he wrapped his trunk around the "shovel" in the heaviest part and that this took most of the strain off the jawbone.

"The shovel-mastodon," says Doctor Barbour, "must have carried his head high in order that the protruding mandible could clear the ground when it walked, and not interfere with progression. Fortunately our specimen is perfect. The tusks have the whiteness and the density, as well as the decussating lines of ivory. The bones are white and firm and the molars almost unblemished."

The shovel-tusks extend from the lower jawbones in this elephant, while in other elephants the tusks extend from the upper jaw. Doctor Barbour makes a guess that the upper tusks may have been dwarfed or possibly aborted altogether in this new mammoth.

First indications of the presence of the fossil remains of the big "shovel" tusker were reported to the university by A. S. Keith of Freedom, Frontier county, and a geological expedition was sent to that county to search for other remains. It was this expedition that gathered the lower jaw, the tusks and molars, the ribs and the toe bone. It is hoped that additional remains will eventually be found of the "steam shovel" elephant.

Had Alphabet 10,000 Years Ago, Stone Shows

Vichy, France.—That man possessed a definite alphabet 10,000 years ago, apparently has been established by the finds made by the International Commission of Scientists investigating the excavations at Glozel, near here. Controversy over the authenticity of the supposedly neolithic remains developed last September when Rene Dussaud, conservator of the Louvre museum, said that the implements and bones were "planted" at Glozel less than twenty years ago and probably as a hoax.

The anthropological congress which heard his charges then took up the appointment of a committee to determine the authenticity of the find. The scientists began digging after taking precautions against fraud. At first they found nothing. But later, in a field believed to be the site of a neolithic cemetery, they unearthed a piece of polished stone. This showed a drawing of a deer and six distinctly engraved characters of the disputed Glozel alphabet and a red clay idol on which the Glozel death mask—a face without a mouth—was visible.

Invents New Lens to Take Colored Movies

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Using only a special lens attachment for ordinary cameras, a new motion picture optical color process was demonstrated here recently for the first time.

The process was invented by Harold N. Cox of Pittsburgh, formerly connected with the Edison Research Laboratories.

Cox said the new process calls into use "a simple lens attachment which can be placed on any camera." The pictures taken, he asserted, can be "developed in any laboratory fitted to turn out the ordinary motion picture, printed on black and white stock, neither tinted nor toned, or in any way artificially colored, with regular printing equipment, and projected on any projector or by again using similar lens attachment or shown on any screen."

The process according to its inventor can reproduce any color or shade that the eye can perceive.

Cox claims that with his invention, color films can be produced with no increase in cost over the present black and white method.

Graven Initials Mark Old Trysting Place

Topeka, Kan.—The tokens of many a Nineteenth-century romance are graven in stone at the crest of Burnett's mound, tallest hill in the vicinity of Topeka.

Initials, always in pairs and accompanied by figures representing dates, are carved by the score in the big bowlders until room scarcely remains for more inscriptions.

Dozens of initials and dates indicate romances which blossomed between 1880 and 1900, but few can be found bearing dates since 1910. Modern lovers apparently do not take time to walk from the base of Burnett's mound up its steep sides to the summit, or if they do they do not record their trysts in stone.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Horses Had Five Toes

What we think of as the horse's foot is really his toe. There were once five, but lack of use, as he formed the habit of throwing his weight on the center toe, caused the others to gradually become smaller and finally disappear. The nail became hardened and later formed the hoof to protect the toe.

Earthworms Lured to Surface by "Fiddling"

"In a recent number, before I left Lynn Haven, Fla., I became interested in your article on 'Musical Earthworms,' and noted that some scientists were giving their attention to a solution of the mystery. It reminds me of a peculiar fact that is often noticed in Florida—in the St. Andrews bay district, at least. When fishermen want fishworms for bait they go out and fiddle for them. It is accomplished in this way: A thin board is driven well into the ground to leave a foot or eighteen inches above the ground. Another board or stick is drawn back and forth across the upright board, producing a shuddering or vibration of the upright board. After a few seconds of this, large worms begin to crawl out of the earth for twenty-five or thirty feet around the center upright, and the fisherman has only to pick them up. I have seen eighty to one hundred picked up from a single effort. My husband has tried the same method in North Carolina and in Michigan, but without success, while I have seen him succeed every time he has tried in Lynn Haven."—Mrs. W. B. Harrell, in a letter to the Literary Digest.

A Reminder

Mrs. Mae Leonard Woodruff, secretary of the Women's Home Missionary society, was discussing in New York the work of the disarmament conference at Geneva.

"These nations at Geneva, pretending to be so unselfish, yet at the same time acting in their own interest alone—well, these nations," she said, "remind me of old Judge Kelley.

"Judge Kelley was chosen to judge a beauty contest. There were a great many lovely girls entered as contestants, but the judge gave the prize to his daughter, a cross-eyed old maid.

"When he was upbraided for this he answered calmly:

"'A man must favor his own.'"

Gasoline Substitute

An alcohol mixture said to be capable of replacing gasoline in engines of automobiles, and possibly of airplanes, has been developed by the Warsaw Polytechnic institute and is attracting much attention in Poland. It is said that required adjustments in the engine for use of the mixture are slight, and in many ways the new liquid is superior to gasoline. No alcohol fit for beverage purposes can be separated from the mixture, even by fractional distillation. As the price of each of the ingredients, except ether and benzol, is less than that of gasoline, the mixture could be made cheaper than gasoline, it is claimed by the institute.

Early Air-Mail Delivery

What may have been the first successful delivery of mail by air was made 57 years ago in France. Out of a mass of mail stamps of famed flights collected by Harry A. Truby, vice president of the Aero-Philatelic Society of America, is one recording that on September 23, 1870, M. Jules Durouf flew from Paris in a balloon with messages to Craconville, France. At that time Paris was withstanding the Prussian siege. Truby's collection of mail stamps includes those used in many pioneering flights over various regions of the globe.

"One of the heaviest costs of business in the United States is the inordinate number of commercial failures," writes Jesse Rainsford in Harper's Magazine. During the past year we had more than 20,000 bankruptcies, more than twice as many as England and France combined."
